SAFEGUARD ELECTRONICS WITH

SURGE PROTECTORS

Surge protectors help save your electronics from power surges or increases in voltage significantly above the intended level in the flow of electricity.

Nearby lightning strikes are most often associated with power surges in your home's wiring that can damage electronics and appliances. But smaller power surges are far more common and can happen at any time of day, regardless of weather.

Point-of-use surge protection devices protect the items directly plugged into them. This surge protector can't stop the surge, but it instead diverts the surge to the ground, away from your electronic devices.

REPLACING SURGE PROTECTORS

- After absorbing powerful surges and spikes, your surge protector eventually will turn into a typical power strip, unable to protect your electronics.
- When a voltage increases beyond the amount the appliance or device can handle, the surge protector diverts the extra voltage to the metal oxide varistor component in the surge protector. This extra voltage stays in the surge protector and gradually destroys that component. Eventually, the surge protector will no longer be able to absorb more surges.
- Lifespans vary depending on how many surges your surge protector is forced to try to absorb. The longer it's been since you last replaced your surge protector, the more voltage your surge protector has absorbed and the more likely you should replace it.

As our state and nation emerge from pandemic restrictions, a celebration of freedom takes on added significance in 2021.

One of the iconic images of the July 4th holiday is Mount Rushmore, the faces of four presidents: George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Theodore Roosevelt and Abraham Lincoln carved into stone, symbolizing American ideals of freedom and democracy.

Though we don't read as many quotes from Teddy Roosevelt compared to the other three patriots on the memorial, on this Independence Day, Inter-County Energy would like to share some fitting words from the 26th president of the United States.

Submitting a 1909 report to Congress by the Commission on Country Life, Roosevelt specifically pointed to cooperatives as key to the success of rural Americans.

"The Cooperative is the best plan of organization. Under this plan, every business is (governed by a board), every person has one vote and only one vote," Roosevelt wrote. "Everyone gets profits based on their use of the co-op. It develops individual responsibility and has a moral as well as a financial value."

More than a century later, Roosevelt's words ring true at Inter-County Energy Cooperative. We are led by, belong to and were built by members of the communities we serve. In other words, Inter-County Energy is independent. Though we align with other cooperatives to efficiently serve you, we are not owned or controlled by any out-of-town interests. That's something to celebrate on this Independence Day.

TIM WEBB

Twenty-four years after Roosevelt left office, his fifth-cousin, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, established the Rural Electrification Administration. When Congress authorized funding through the Rural Electrification Act, it enabled nonprofit electric cooperatives like Inter-County Energy to secure low-cost loans to acquire the necessary facilities to bring electricity to farms and other rural areas.

"The forward march of electric cooperatives has profound significance in terms of our fight to preserve the democracy," FDR said.

This patriotic message is not simply a footnote in history books. To Inter-County Energy, it is a rallying cry in our service for you, the consumer-members who own the cooperative, especially as co-ops face challenges to our ability to provide safe, reliable and affordable electricity.

"Much has been given us, and much will rightfully be expected from us," Teddy Roosevelt said in his Inaugural Address in 1905. "We have duties to others and duties to ourselves; and we can shirk neither. We have become a great nation, forced by the fact of its greatness into relations with the other nations of the earth, and we must behave as befits a people with such responsibilities."
